General algorithm of execution

Writing-reasoning on a linguistic topic is still the most difficult option of the three possible. You can use our service Write Essays For Money to deal with it or keep reading the article.

For its successful writing it is necessary to observe the following algorithm:

- re-read the proposed quote, make sure that its content is understood correctly, identify key words and sentences;
- to determine what kind of phenomena the author has in mind (it can be the expressiveness of the language and its richness, features of syntax, punctuation, characteristics of individual parts of speech, etc.);
- re-reading the text;
- formulate your position.

In order for the composition to be competently structured, it is worth highlighting the following elements:

- entry;
- main part;
- final part.

The basis of the introduction is the very statement underlying the composition. After that, the position of the author of the work on the problem under consideration should be presented.

The second-the main part-should begin with a smooth transition to the text, which should become the basis of the evidence base. Next, you need to give examples from the text, which will be the main arguments.

Requirements:

- there should be two;
- they should be from the proposed text;
- passages should contain the linguistic phenomenon being analyzed, which should be named and analyzed in terms of the functions performed in the presented text.

Arguments can be made in separate sentences with citations. After that, draw a conclusion that the thesis of the work indicated in the introduction is proved.

General recommendation

To preserve the structure and give the composition a logical harmony and completeness, do not forget about the allocation of paragraphs: there should be at least three. With a new line is written introductory, main and final part. It is better if the main part, according to the number of arguments, will also be divided into 2 paragraphs.

When building each sentence, remember the basics of syntax, strive for a variety of constructions, the use of introductory words, different in structure of sentences, not forgetting about the spelling. Words, in spelling which you doubt, better replace in other. Do not use both the same type of simple and too complex sentences. Remember that the work will be evaluated on the basis of a number of criteria, and therefore approach its writing is very responsible.
